

Harry Williams

Harry Williams is a proud Wiradjuri man from Cowra, New South Wales.

Harry's passion for education stems from his Stolen Generations family history. His grandfather, along with his grandfather's brothers and sisters were forcibly removed from their family and community and taken to Kinchela Aboriginal Boys Training Home and Cootamundra Aboriginal Girls' Training Home in NSW.

Harry's grandparents have been his biggest influences, "My Pop has now passed away, and I feel that as a younger person, when you lose an Elder, and they're full of knowledge and stories...

"For Aboriginal people that's like a book or library of thousands and thousands of years of knowledge creation, stories, lore, men's and women's business, ways of thinking and doing, that have been passed down... (now) gone.

"You can never get it back, and I feel I have to find a way to still learn about my culture, my language, while still moving forward with the rest of the world.

"Intergenerational trauma continues to have an impact, hence the need for urgent healing, the right way, our way."
